

Greg Martin

Greg was born in South Africa before coming to the UK via Chile. He came to Bristol to study a Computer Science degree at Bristol University before spending just over 10 years in the IT industry, initially doing training and interface design. He then moved into change management and personal skills training. A desire to spend more time with his family made him leave the IT industry, spending just over a year in the Disney Corporation where their development program helped him hone his skills.

Greg joined the University Hospitals Bristol Foundation Trust 8 years ago as part of the Cancer Services Collaborative providing change management skills to help streamline and modernise service delivery. Since then he has worked in a number of departments driving improvement to ensure achievement of the cancer targets and improvements to patient experience. He has recently spent a year working in service improvement at the ASWCS Cancer Network before returning to UHBristol. After supporting the cancer teams through the National Peer Review process for 2010. He is currently working with the cancer services team to help achieve and maintain the existing cancer standards, supported by chocolate.
